How racist is this whole plan. Their country is doomed if they do this. They'll be like Zimbabwe in a few years...all starving.

I'm already hungry. I think what's happened is the disgruntled generation after believed the narrative that "the whites are to blame therefore the whites have to pay". This in itself doesn't make sense if we have to call everyone equal. Of course there were injustices, but when we take from the children of those who might have benefited from those injustices we are literally just continuing the cycle.

Not only that, but...if you're going to blame white people for their bad actions, why don't they praise them for all the good actions? Congratulations on your malaria cure, clean running water, transportation, etc, now come genocide us I guess?

Yea and so far I know South Africa is heading to a water shortage so things wouldn't get better.

Instead to coming up with a plan to prevent this the new government of South Africa is looking to find a scapegoat and blame the white farmers, look like they never learned what happened in Zimbabwe.

At this rate South Africa is heading into a disaster.

Seems black people are just as institutionally racist as america 60 years ago. And black people are whining about racism in america that never happened to them by anyone even alive. Pathetic people.

Ideology is a hell of a drug. This sub along with r news/politics/europe have been sipping this koolaid for the past few years now, its completely surreal. Getting uppke reddit could get like this.

Edit: the fact that this comment is doing upvotes instead of downvotes is reassuring. Maybe this sub is waking up.

Two things:

1. Most of the rights in the SA constitution can be limited if it is fair to do so.

2. The Promotion of Equality and Prevention of Unfair Discrimination Act (PEPUDA) and the Constitution both prevent 'unfair' discrimination.

In SA law, you may leave a position vacant rather than appoint a white person if doing so would mean that the appointment would place too many white people in that company / government department. This decision was confirmed by the Constitutional Court (the SA version of the SCA). This is one of the main reasons why many South Africans have emigrated (some of them are just racist bastards).

The land issue is extremely complicated, but without getting into emotional / moral / ethical / restitutional issues: Most people don't necessarily own the land that they live / farm on (how many people do you know who completely own their house) - instead they have loans from banks that they are paying off. So, if the land is taken from them without compensation, they cannot pay their loans to the bank, and the bank itself folds.

Pretty easy to understand really. The land issue is very important in South Africa but it needs to be very carefully handled. At the moment it is being used for political capital (we have elections in 2019).

Why do I get the feeling that the motivation for seizing land comes from a bygone era when a very large portion of the population "worked the land"? A time when things looked a lot like American slavery or, at the very least, like feudalism but with a very strong racial component?

But today of course, fewer people than ever work the fields. Urbanization has transformed the country and its social dynamics just like it has all over the world.

1 onetad 9 points 2 hours ago

I wouldn't exactly call apartheid a better system. The whole problem is what lead to a lot of modern problems. For example, this expropriation debate wuldnt be happening if land distribution was more equal in the beginning.

permalink embed save parent report give gold reply

1 shinarit score hidden 1 hour ago

No, the destruction of apartheid lead to the problems. Just like how falling doesn't kill you, impacting does, and you can fall forever if you want, it's called being in orbit.

Second, if there were a magical "equal rights and opportunities" thing at the beginning, most likely the situation would be still the same, the Dutch farmers just have more know how now to talk about other things. They would still have the majority of land and wealth, and the common person doesn't care about why someone has more than they do, they just hate them for it.

That's exactly what's happened since the end of colonialism there. Still a number of white folks living in the country and unless you are arguing this dude isn't black then it's very much an example.

Things may not be great there but it's hardly Leopold's mess.

Aren't there a lot of white 'preppers' in SA preparing for this exact eventuality? Making their own sort of city-state in SA and waiting it all out?

If/when it comes to actual civil war France and maybe a few other European powers would eventually intervene, judging by history.

Not exactly. You are referring to two separate entities. One is Orania. A community situated on private ground who are quite strict about who comes to live there. Funny thing is they are basically branded as the country's worst right wing racists all the while they revere the news headlines and are basically just minding their own all the while our "democratic" government... Well Yeah...

The other is The Suidlanders. They are the preppers. Considered conspiracy theory loons with a mean racist streak, they are basically all about coming together in the event of national white genocidal killing spree.

It will be interesting to see the reaction in the US. Back in the 80s, when I was in college, there were huge protests against the injustice of apartheid, and rightly so. Will college students once again take to the quads and demand divestment, or will they sit back and be fine with a government taking land from a racial minority without compensation in order to give it to those with political power?

JOHANNESBURG - South Africa's state-owned Land Bank said on Monday a plan to allow the state to seize land without compensation could trigger defaults that could cost the government 41 billion rand if the bank's rights as a creditor are not protected.

Land Bank Chairman Arthur Moloto said in the company's 2018 annual report that the bank has approximately 9 billion rand of debt, which includes a standard market clause on "Expropriation" as an event of default.

Moloto said the bank was generally funded by the local debt and capital markets, and more recently international multilateral institutions such as the African Development Bank and World Bank.
